Second Innings — extending the life of sport

VERSION 1.0

FOR WEBSITE, PRINT AND SOCIAL

HYDERABAD, INDIA

The mark.

The circular mark is the primary identity. It works on its own once people know us; until then, pair it with the wordmark. There are three supplied files, all with a transparent background.

Do

Keep clear space around the mark equal to the width of the football inside it. Place it on cream, white or a cream circle. Use the transparent PNG, never a screenshot.

Don't

Don't recolour it, add a drop shadow, stretch it, rotate it, put it on a busy photo, or drop it straight onto navy without the cream circle — the football's white panels disappear.

Navy carries it. Orange points at things.

Navy is the voice; orange is the finger. Use orange only for the one thing you want tapped — a button, a link, a number. If two things on a layout are orange, one of them is wrong.

Body text

Rough proportions: 60% cream, 25% navy, 10% neutral greys, 5% orange. Contrast: Ink on Cream and Cream on Navy 800 both pass WCAG AA. Orange 500 on cream passes for large text only — never set body copy in orange.

Two fonts. Both free.

Fraunces for anything large and emotional. Inter for anything you have to read. Both are on Google Fonts, free for commercial use, and available in Canva.

Sentence case, never ALL CAPS.

The one rule

Fraunces never goes below 13pt and never carries a full paragraph. Inter never carries a hero headline. Mixing them the other way round is what makes a layout look homemade.

If Fraunces is unavailable

Substitute Playfair Display or Instrument Serif. For Inter, substitute DM Sans or system default. Never Times or Arial.

Eighteen sports, one pen.

All icons are drawn on a 24×24 grid with a 1.5 px stroke, round caps and round joins, and no fill. That single rule is what makes them look like a set. If you add a sport, match it exactly.

Colour

On cream, cycle through the six brand colours so no two neighbours match. On navy, set every icon to cream at 90% — colour on dark gets muddy.

Size

19–21 px inside chips, 25 px in the ticker, 34 px standalone. Below 16 px the detail collapses — use the logo mark instead.

Buttons, chips, fields, corners.

Buttons — always fully rounded

Nothing on this brand has a sharp corner. If it looks square, it is wrong.

The same system, at 1080 px.

Three layouts cover almost everything you will ever post. Build them once in Canva as templates and reuse them — consistency is what makes a small account look established.

Story

Story text must stay inside the top and bottom 250 px or the app UI covers it.

Grid rhythm

Alternate navy, cream and photo posts so the profile grid reads as a pattern rather than a pile. Never three navy in a row.

Photos

Consent

Never post a child's face or name without written permission from the school and the family. No exceptions, including stories.

Plain, specific, never pitiful.

We are matching supply with demand, not begging. The tone is a capable friend explaining something simple — warm, concrete and slightly understated. Understatement is what makes people believe you.

Sounds like us

"That bat is not doing anything in there."

"63 items, 4 schools. Small numbers, honestly counted."

"Talent is spread evenly. Equipment is not."

"We collect from everywhere in Hyderabad."

Doesn't

"Help these poor underprivileged children!"

"Empowering youth through the transformative power of sport."

"Thousands of lives changed!!"

"Donate now — every rupee counts!"

Four habits

Name the number

"Six footballs to one school" beats "many items to many schools". If the number is small, say the small number.

Never invent impact

One made-up figure a funder catches discredits everything else on the page. Where something is an estimate, say so.

Dignity over pity

Describe children as players, not victims. They are not lucky to receive; the equipment is lucky to be used.

Short sentences

If a sentence needs a comma to survive, cut it in two. Read it aloud — if you run out of breath, it is too long.

Everything on one page.

If you remember only three things

1. Cream background, navy text, orange for one action only.
2. Fraunces for the big line, Inter for everything else.
3. Nothing has a sharp corner, and no number is ever invented.
